The show's title and the performers' credits will appear during the opening montage sequence.

1 EXT. CHAR -- THE SMOLDERING RUINS -- DAY

1

The camera pans from the shadows to reveal the massive smoldering, ash-covered realm of Char. The sky and realm are grey and black with soot and embers flying through the air. There is some offset with the red and orange glow of fires strewn about and reflecting in the ashy clouds of the smoke-filled sky. There are corpses of different monsters at varying stages of decay scattered amongst the burnt rubble along with some charred skulls and bones. The imposing and confident Horse Rider WAR comes into the shot and stops to look off far into the distance. He is wearing a blood-colored cloak covered in blood stains, burns, and rips, and his face is not visible. On the horizon, a gigantic tower reaching far into the sky is somewhat discernable through the smoke and haze. War resumes his journey towards the tower and moves passed the camera.

2 EXT. MORABUND -- THE DYING LANDS -- DAY

2

This enormous realm looks parched and distorted by the heat. All the vegetation is withered and dead. It's very desertlike with sand dunes of golden, orange and brown hues. There are a few mummified corpses of various creatures and beings who are baking in the sun after dying from dehydration or starvation. The hunched and weak-looking Horse Rider FAMINE who is in a light yellowish-brown cloak with a face that is also not visible, has a dead pet vulture named WHISPER on his back. Locusts flutter around Famine as he quickly passes through the shot on his way to an identical-looking tower that is off in the distance. The interesting thing is that while the tower is the same one as on Char, it is not in the same realm as Char.

There is a corpse partially sticking out of the swamp that is being harassed by insects. The sickly Horse Rider PESTILENCE who is wearing a greenish cloak with his face also not visible, is heard coughing and wheezing as he moves along the swamp's edge in the direction of another identical-looking tower far off into the distance.

EXT. THE HEREAFTER -- DEATH'S COTTAGE -- EVENING

4

This realm is completely dead. There is no water, vegetation, or life of any kind whatsoever. It is eternal night here. What looks like moons, are casting their glow through the clouds and fog of this cold, dark-bluish colored world. The ground is flat and cracked as far as the eye can see. Strong winds blow the glowing light-blue fog chaotically across the landscape's surface. Death's little cottage sits by itself in the middle of no where. The final Horse Rider DEATH in his black cloak with his face also not visible, opens the door and leaves his cottage, locking the door behind himself. He begins to walk over to where his dead half-horse WINKY is waiting for him. (Winky's body is severed in half. The back half with its hind legs are completely gone, but Death still has room to sit on what remains of Winky's back and its front legs still run just fine).

5

EXT. THE HEREAFTER -- THE VAST EMPTINESS -- EVENING

5

Death is riding Winky as it races across the vast emptiness.

6

EXT. THE HEREAFTER -- THE RUINED CHAPEL -- EVENING

6

Death and Winky pass through the destroyed ruins of what use to be some kind of a massive gothic chapel.

7

EXT. THE HEREAFTER -- THE NECROPOLIS -- EVENING

7

Death and Winky race through the Necropolis.

8

EXT. THE HEREAFTER -- THE WELL OF SOULS -- EVENING

8

In the distance is a large monolithic tower enveloped by light blue-green energy swirling and dancing around the structure. Death again speeds passed it on Winky.

9

EXT. THE HEREAFTER -- TITAN'S RIDGE -- EVENING

9

A giant skeleton of some kind of beast is half buried and sticking out of the side of the cliff. It is at least a couple of hundred times larger than Death in size. Once again, Death is riding Winky passed it.
